Protect the Greatest Asset You'll Ever Have...

You may have outgrown your home - but you'll never outgrow your family.

Building your own house is an exciting and rewarding challenge. But what if during the construction phase, you or your partner, suffer a terrible injury on site?

At a minimum, either of you could be off work for a couple of days or weeks.

Worse still, one of you could end up partially or totally disabled and unable to return work at all.

How would you cope amongst other things, with the medical expenses and loss of income as a result? After all, you'll still need to support your family during and after the construction phase.

Professional builders and tradesmen ensure they're properly covered, should an unforeseen circumstance occur. Why would the task of building your own home, hold any less risk for you?
